Islander 48

Traditional design with modern underbody

According to the designer, Ted Brewer, the Islander 48 was not necessarily created for a particular part of the country, but rather for a particular person.

"Sort of the person who buys and drives a Mercedes-Benz 300 DS," Brewer said. "Not only that," Brewer continued, "but we wanted a classic boat that will be recognized 10 to 15 years from now. While not exactly the same type of boat, we wanted to create the feeling that sailors have about the old Bermuda 40—something that won't be passe 10 years down the road."
